Q Can a man actually break his penis?

Jill, senior

A This seemed like a good opportunity for some field research. So, I grabbed my clipboard and a ball-peen hammer and headed to campus to collect some data. A line quickly formed when guys found out they could participate in an interactive sex study, but as soon as I pulled out the hammer they all took off. Even the Cuffs members said that was a little too extreme for them. While I couldn't find any volunteers, all my research indicates a man can't break his penis like the way you broke your leg in that tragic Cy-Ride accident.

Surprisingly, many women don't know that much about penises, except that they're "neat." Despite the rumors you've heard, there is no "penis bone." It's a myth. But there is such a phenomenon known as penile fracture. According to askalice.com, a loud "cracking" sound, followed by a blood-curdling scream, indicates a fractured penis. This happens when the rigid penis slams into an equally solid object, like a pelvic bone. Or an oak tree in your neighbors' back yard. Or your Corsica's exhaust pipe.

If, when you look down, it looks like you're signaling a left turn with your penis, immediately tell your partner to call 911. Chances are you won't be in the mood to make any calls. You'll be curled into the fetal position on the floor, weeping softly.

At the hospital, doctors will "set" the little guy. Don't be a wiseass and ask the nurse to sign the cast. She won't. Instead, my advice would be to keep this little mishap under the radar while your man-root heals. Which may be a while. Until then, stay out of the neighbors' back yard.

Q I think I'm addicted to masturbating. A problem arises when my girlfriend comes over and I have just finished, and she is feeling frisky. How can I stall her until I'm ready to go again?

Joe, senior

A How can you stall her? Hmm, let's think about this ... if there was only something you could do with your girlfriend before sex... um, like some kind of "pre-sex" or something... a playful action of sorts you could do before the main event that would get both her and you all revved up...if only there was something like that, you wouldn't have to worry about not being ready to go right away...

Ever heard of FOREPLAY?

No? I'm not surprised. Like people addicted to coke, gambling, and Pokemon cards, those addicted to masturbating seem to be self-centered individuals. Are you stealing money just to buy more Kleenex? Are you skipping class to whack off? Do you have carpal tunnel syndrome in one or more of your hands or feet?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, you are a chronic masturbator (or a lazy student with a cold who does repetitive tasks with his hands and/or feet.) Either way, you're going to need lots of therapy.

It's a fine line between chronic masturbation and being addicted to masturbation. But what separates those who enjoy a little jerk here and there and someone in your situation? Common sense (and a non-calloused dick). If, as with any addiction, masturbation is conflicting with being a normal human being, you should take steps to stop masturbating. At the very least, keep your hands off on days when you know your girlfriend is coming over. Think about it: You're giving up sex between two people for sex between you and your five fingers. And that's almost as sad as being a Pokemon card addict.

Q When I have an orgasm, I discharge a lot of liquid, including blood. This can't be normal. What should I do, do you think it's serious?

Jen, freshman

A Hmm, let's see. You're bleeding out of your vagina and you realize this is pretty unusual. Don't write to me and wait to see what advice I can give you. Get to a doctor, girl.

Q My girlfriend and I recently started debating piercing her clitoral hood. She has received mixed opinions when talking to people who have done it. What can we expect in terms of pleasure for both of us?

Kevin, sophomore

A Yet again, we find ourselves pondering the great sexual equation of our time: A (sex act with partner) + B (chunk of metal jutting through vagina) = C (mind-blowing orgasms). However, most guys seem to have a little trouble with their math.

Some guys interpret the equation to read A = C, completely eliminating a sometimes-essential step to female orgasms. Others often confuse their symbols, mistaking B for b (an additional girl, a unicycle, and/or chocolate syrup).

Girls, on the other hand, seem to get the most out of the equation. If your girlfriend wants to get her clitoral hood pierced to get B into the bedroom, you should be all for it. It definitely increases the likelihood she'll get to C. You give a little, she'll give a little.

But the clit ring comes with downsides too. Metal detectors and high-powered magnets suddenly become something to worry about.

Snagging also can be a concern, whether on her underwear or anything else that might be in the region. And if both you and your girlfriend are pierced, entanglement could be an issue.

Clitoral hood piercing can be done in Ames and costs as little as $40. While it may be uncomfortable to have someone staring at your girlfriend's cooch, it's safer and cleaner to have a trained professional do it rather than your sleazy friend Scott in his basement with a hot safety pin.

Another thing to keep in mind is that the piercing takes four to six weeks to properly heal. That's four to six weeks a little metal ring will be getting more action than you.

If she does decide to have her clitoral hood pierced, keep in mind that she'll hurt like hell, you'll be out 40 bucks, and Hot Rod will have a detailed mental picture of your girl-friend's newly-decorated vagina. But a month later when she's healed, I think you'll both be very satisfied.

Maybe multiple times.

Q When my ex-girlfriend and I were in the moment and she was getting ready to climax, she would go limp and pass out. It would only be a minute or two, but the first time it happened, I freaked out. Do you know what would cause this to happen?

Bruce, senior

A Roofies. Lots of 'em. Assuming you're not a predatory sex maniac, it sounds as if you might be boasting. Not many guys can bring a girl to orgasm, let alone force her out of consciousness. But short of godlike sexual prowess, there are a few more likely scenarios.

One is, and I don't mean to scare you, your girlfriend is having a stroke. Not the kind your grandma had, a more pleasant and sexual kind. When you, or anyone else, get horny, blood that normally would go to your brain takes a detour and winds up in the genitalia. This results in hornier, stupider people. Or in your girlfriend's case, losing consciousness just before her big moment. Regardless, she needs to see a doctor. Passing out, under any circumstances, isn't normal.

So the next time you're with a girl and she passes out, stop and think: Am I bad luck ... or just that damn good? Then, lie her flat on her back. If that doesn't work, try the Heimlich maneuver. Wait, check that. Raise her legs so the blood will flow back to her brain.

If after a few minutes she doesn't regain consciousness, it's time to unhandcuff her and call 911. When you speak to the operator, don't waste precious time explaining how your girl passed out because of your godlike sexual prowess. The operator will just assume you used the roofies.
